Two boys built a house out of fear of a wolf. They did everything together and the house grew according to their wishes. But they got into an argument, split up the house, and started to compete against each other. Then the wolf came and scared them both. The boys ran, and they nearly destroyed the whole house before they realized that there was nothing to be scared of and as long as they tolerate each other they could live together in peace, even with the wolf.

A movie about a man, who left and left something behind, and about people who stayed and something of them is gone. This short, intimate documentary talks about the loss felt by the family when one of its members passes away. It is the daughter [of the director's grandparents], the director's mother, and the wife of the director's father. How do we come to terms with such a situation?
